THE CITATION

Mr. Chancellor, it is my privilege to present to you and to this Convocation a candidate for the degree of Doctor of Laws, honoris causa, to be conferred by you on behalf of York University upon:

JOHN WILLIAM YOLTON

The service rendered by John Yolton to York University has been long and distinguished - distinguished by his willingness to assume important responsibilities and discharge them with grace and wisdom. He has been Chairman of what, under his guidance, has become a most distinguished Department of Philosophy, Acting Dean of Graduate Studies, Chairman of Senate, a member of the Board of Governors, a member of the provincial Presidents' Research Committee, a member of the provincial Appraisals Committee, and chairman of numerous selection committees and curriculum study groups. His record of academic service and achievement is equally impressive. His scholarly works - and the professional acclaim they receive - have continued unabated for twenty-five years, and give evidence of an astonishing energy and depth of mind. His studies of the works of John Locke are classics in their field. His published works include six major, original books, three works of edition and some forty contributions to learned journals and collations. He contributes to the editing of no less than five major learned journals in philosophy. In short, he is a scholar of international distinction whose standing amongst his fellow philosophers has been recently vouchsafed by his election to the Presidency of the Canadian Philosophical Association. He has taught not only at York, but at such centres of learning as John Hopkins, Princeton and Maryland. As a teacher, he is without peer, a man who has given himself to two generations of students, and who derives real joy from sharing with them in the exercise of humane rationality.

These achievements alone would qualify John Yolton for the honour to be conferred upon him today. But it is a different course of events and accomplishments that brings us here. Seventeen months ago York needed somebody to act as President. We needed a person whose academic reputation, integrity and independence would be unquestioned by the faculty, whose candour and good sense would be respected by the Board, and whose actions would spring from a gestalt conviction that the University is something more than the sum of its separate parts. We needed, in fact, a particular sort of paragon. We found that paragon in John Yolton.

As we have already observed, John's major academic interest for a quarter of a century has been the study and exposition of the works of John Locke, the British philosopher who was a seminal figure in the development of what is known as "The Age of Reason". Thus it is perhaps no accident that our own John is not only known for his reasonableness but, in the eyes of his colleagues, has come to personify the other Augustan virtues - honesty, moral profundity, stability, wit and good taste. As Locke himself observed: "The great question which, in all ages, has disturbed mankind...has been, not whether there be power in the world, nor whence it came, but who should have it." In its hour of need, York gave the power of presidency to John Yolton. It has never ceased to congratulate itself upon its corporate wisdom.

At a time when the University was beset by financial calamity, managerial chaos and a general deterioration in morale, John dared to assert the principle that academic decisions and academic development must have primacy in the considerations of the President and his senior officers. He recognized the University's budgetary problems, accepted the constraints, then called on the best will of his colleagues to work within or overcome those constraints. He has insisted that it is not the President who is the key to the academic vitality of the institution, but the collectivity of the members of the University. He has held steadfastly to the view that the people of York possess the talent and initiative to solve York's problems themselves, and that the President's role is to bring people together - "get them talking", as he would say - and establish an environment in which potential can become achievement.

Thus it is that, as John leaves the Office of the President, he can proudly hand over to his successor an institution which has regenerated its sense of self-confidence, which has developed a new awareness of its own strengths and abilities...and which has balanced its budget. That York has been able to do this is a reflection of John Yolton's wisdom and humanity. And equally to his credit is the fact that his period of power has not changed the man. The President of a modern university is subject to awesome strains and pressures. These pressures are inescapable, their thrusts unpredictable, their marks often enduring. In a somewhat different context, Thomas Jefferson asserted that: "No man will ever bring out of the Presidency the reputation which carries him into it." John Yolton stands before us today as a living refutation of that pessimistic judgement. He has survived the pressures of office unbowed and uncorrupted. Those qualities for which he was chosen as Acting President - integrity, openness, humanity, trustworthiness, strength of principle - have come through the fire and remain the distinguishing marks of his character and personality.

Quid virtus et quid sapientia possit, utile proposuit nobis exemplar...

Mr. Chancellor, I present to you Professor John Yolton of York University, and ask you to express to him the affection and gratitude of his colleagues by conferring upon him the degree of Doctor of Laws, honoris causa.
