* In February, Dean Eisen, of the Faculty of Arts, appointed a committee to review the programs of the Divisions of Humanities, Social Sciences and Natural Science. Among other things, this committee is trying to collect information on such topics as:

- 1) the manner in which the Divisional Courses may serve the needs of students in the various faculties;
- 2) the extent to which the 100-level divisional courses are taught at a level appropriate for first-year students;
- 3) the effectiveness of various teaching formats (lectures, team teaching, tutorials, class size, etc.); and,
- 4) the relationship between the 100-level divisional courses and courses taken at the Grade XIII or community college level.

Thus far, the Committee has discussed these and other questions with faculty and invited comment from all instructors involved in Divisional Programs. It is now extending an invitation to students and faculty generally throughout the University to submit comments on the effectiveness of Divisional courses and suggestions for improvements.

Communications should be addressed to: Professor C.D. Fowle, Department of Biology, Chairman; Professor K. Koenig, Department of Psychology and Division of Social Science; Professor M.
