OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

TO ALL MEMBERS OF THE YORK COMMUNITY

We are all concerned about the consequences that the recent strikes have had for us at York. At this point, our first concern as a university must be the quality of the education we offer our students. The strikes affected courses in many Faculties, and it is now necessary to make up the time we lost in order to ensure the integrity of our academic programmes. After broad consultation, I believe the following policy on making up lost time to be the only fair and practical solution available to us that is consistent with our academic responsibilities. It has not been an easy task to develop such a policy. With 35,000 students, several thousand courses, over 500 Fall-Term exams and relatively little extra time or space available during regularly scheduled periods, it is impossible to leave matters exclusively to ad hoc private arrangements. Too many students will be seriously inconvenienced, or worse, fail to receive proper make-up sessions, if we do not operate out of a common problem-solving framework. At the same time, I appreciate that circumstances differ from Faculty to Faculty; accordingly, I have tried to recognize and rely upon local autonomy and decentralized procedures wherever possible.

This policy provides the time and space for missed work to be made-up. As far as remedial action is concerned, I have seen and endorse the policy proposed by the Senate Executive Committee, a policy to be considered by Senate on Wednesday, November 14th.

POLICY ON MAKE-UP SESSIONS(a) Faculties of Arts, Education (Pre-Service Courses), Fine Arts and Science

The normal Fall-Term examination period scheduled for December 10-21, 1984 will be cancelled.

This period will now be set aside to provide the time and space necessary for rescheduling classes that did not meet during the strikes. In order to minimize inconvenience and disruption for students, classes scheduled for this period will take place in their regular rooms at their normal times. Of course, those classes not substantially affected by the strikes need not use the extra two weeks in December for instructional purposes.

Examinations in Fall-Term half courses scheduled originally for December will be shifted to an examination period between January 4 and 10, 1985; the two days prior to this exam period will serve as preparation days for students, and no classes will be held.

Mid-year examinations for full courses scheduled for December will not be held. Instructors may have students write equivalent tests in class, either during December or in early January after classes resume.

Instruction in the Winter Term will begin on Friday, January 11, 1985. Because of the week lost to the examination period, the Winter Term will be extended by one week beyond the date originally scheduled. Final exams in the Winter Term will take place as originally scheduled.

(b) Atkinson College

The Winter Term will be extended to include the week beginning December 17 for classes where make-up work is required. The beginning of the Winter Term will be delayed until the week of January 14, and the reading week scheduled for the Winter Term will be cancelled for those classes where additional make-up work is required. All half and full courses beginning in January will be extended by one week.

(c) Faculty of Graduate Studies (Programmes in Arts, Education, Fine Arts and Science)

Due to the diversity of programmes and local circumstances, the scheduling of make-up work will vary from programme to programme. All such arrangements are to be approved by the Dean of Graduate Studies. Winter-Term courses will not begin until Friday, January 11.

(d) Faculties of Administrative Studies, Education (In-Service Courses), Environmental Studies, Glendon College and Osgoode Hall Law School

Make-up work can be accommodated by a variety of measures within the existing schedule. No changes in the dates for Fall-Term examinations or the Winter-Term are required.

IMPLEMENTATION OF POLICY

Instructors should inform their departmental chairperson or Dean regarding make-up sessions in order to guarantee the academic integrity of courses. In accordance with the CUEW contract, CUEW members who lost pay as a result of the strike will be fully compensated for make-up sessions authorized by the Dean.

Instructors should maintain scrupulous records of changes in due dates and course requirements. Such changes should be confirmed for students in writing.

Although holding make-up sessions in the regularly-scheduled time and place is the best way to ensure that most students can attend, some may have legitimate conflicts due, for example, to jobs or travel plans. In such cases, instructors should endeavour to make other arrangements, such as providing tapes of class sessions or summaries of work missed.

This make-up policy may necessitate changes in regulations to accommodate the measures we have had to adopt in these exceptional circumstances. I trust that Faculty Councils and Senate will be able to respond appropriately.

I recognize that these measures depart from normal practice at York and will inconvenience some members of the University. I regret this, but feel that this is the best way to safeguard the integrity of our academic programmes, while ensuring that our students are treated fairly and equitably. I am confident that, with your help, we can achieve these goals.

Policy and Procedures For Assessing the Impact of Strikes on the Integrity of Academic Courses and for Taking Remedial Action

APPROVED BY SENATE NOVEMBER 14, 1984

I. Preamble

On April 22, 1982 Senate approved a policy for dealing with the academic consequences of strikes of short duration. At its meeting of October 25, 1984, Senate instructed the Senate Executive Committee:

"to assess the academic implications and consequences of recent/current strike action and on the basis of its assessment to recommend at the next meeting of Senate appropriate strategies for safeguarding the academic interests of the University in the future."

In carrying out this mandate, the Senate Executive Committee has come to the conclusion that the combined effects of the YUSA and CUEW strikes go beyond those which gave rise to, and were addressed by, the 1982 policy on strikes of short duration. It is the opinion of the Senate Executive Committee, therefore, that the 1982 policy should be deemed inapplicable to the present situation. The spirit of the 1982 policy, and many of its specifics, continue to provide valid points of reference.

II. Principles Informing the Proposed Policy

The 1982 policy was, as CEAS reported at the time, informed by the dual principles of the fair treatment of students and the integrity of academic programmes. To these principles the Senate Executive Committee would add a third: that of trust in faculty members and students to demonstrate good judgement, responsibility, flexibility, and goodwill in attempting to come to terms with what is admittedly a complicated and trying situation.

III. Guidelines on Academic Rights and Responsibilities of Faculty Members and Students affected by the YUSA and/or CUEW Strike(s):

1. Students who have missed class or have failed to hand in work because of their decision not to cross picket lines are not subject to penalties for absence or lateness.
2. The immunity from these administrative academic penalties affords in most cases only an extension of a deadline; except where otherwise provided, it does not alter the academic requirements for a course, nor does it relieve the student of responsibility for mastering course work covered during the strike. Students should be given appropriate time to prepare for assignments or tests.
3. In cases where students were prevented from attending class or from conforming with course requirements, alternative arrangements must be made which recognize the two principles of fairness to students and the academic integrity of courses.
4. Students absent from classes held during a strike should receive reasonable alternative access to material covered.
5. These guidelines are not exhaustive, nor do they limit steps which faculty members may take to ensure that students are treated fairly. Instructors and students are encouraged to discuss procedures applicable to their courses with a view towards finding a solution adequate to the particular situation.
6. Students who are not satisfied with the resolution proposed for one or more of their courses may communicate with the department chairperson, the Dean of the Faculty, or with Senate CEAS.
7. Any complaints so received will be referred in the first instance to the departmental chairperson. If a student is still not satisfied with the decision taken at the departmental level, s/he may appeal to the Faculty committee charged with overseeing academic standards, and, ultimately, to Senate CEAS.
8. Faculties may wish to develop more specific directives based on these guidelines. Faculty-specific guidelines should be circulated broadly, so that all affected are aware of them, and a copy should be sent to Senate CEAS, which will be the final arbiter of disputes.

IV. Ensuring the Academic Integrity of Courses

The recent strikes have affected courses in many different ways. For those courses unaffected or minimally affected, the Guidelines on Academic Rights and Responsibilities may suffice in helping instructors and students cope with unexpected situations. For other courses, however, make-up sessions will be necessary in order to preserve academic standards. Individual instructors are in the best situation to determine, in the first instance, the extent to which their courses have been affected. In doing so, they should take into consideration the criteria listed in Part V below. Notwithstanding the principle that individual instructors should undertake course-by-course assessments of their offerings, and despite the necessity of considering a variety of criteria, one overriding criterion stands out: the amount of instructional time lost.

V. Criteria to be Considered in Assessing the Impact of the Strikes on Academic Standards

- A. Availability and Participation of Course Members
 1. students (including "critical mass" in seminars)
 2. instructors
 - a. lecturer(s)
 - b. tutorial leader(s)
 - c. course directors
 - d. instructors of parallel sections in multi-section courses
 - e. laboratory demonstrators / writing workshop assistants

- B. Availability of Physical and Instructional Resources
 - 1. instructional venues (classroom, library, laboratory)
 - 2. "hardware" (projectors, tape recorders, computers) or other equipment or supplies
 - 3. "software" (dittos, films, tapes, programmes, books, periodicals)
- C. Disruption of the Pedagogical Process
 - 1. nature and extent of participation in interactive courses
 - 2. disruption in timing or sequence of tests, assignments, readings
 - 3. synchronization between parallel sections, or between lectures and tutorials, in multi-section courses
- D. Duration of Interruption
 - 1. time lost in context of entire course (proportion of total contact hours lost)
 - 2. where in term or year interruption takes place (early, middle, late)
- E. By applying these criteria as appropriate in a given circumstance, it should be possible to come to one of four basic conclusions about the impact of a strike on an individual course or set of similar courses:
 - 1. (relatively) unaffected: no remedial action needed;
 - 2. minimally affected: minor remedial action by instructor(s) suffices (for example, rescheduling of tests or assignments, reorganization of topics, individualized advising or tutoring);
 - 3. substantially affected: in addition to remedial actions covered in 2, major remedial action is required, primarily in the form of formally-scheduled additional class sessions and possible extension of the term for the course with concomitant changes in examination scheduling.
 - 4. irredeemably affected: the effects of the interruption are so severe that no amount of remedial work can bring the course to an acceptable academic standard. Senate would declare the course ineligible for credit, in effect cancelling it.
- F. Where two or more weeks of instructional time in a full-year course or one or more weeks in a half course are lost due to strikes, the course will be deemed to require an extension of its teaching term, with concomitant changes in examination scheduling where appropriate, in order to safeguard its academic integrity.

VI. Procedures for Assessing the Effect of Strikes on the Academic Integrity of Courses and for Taking Remedial Action

- A. By November 23, 1984, individual instructors should assess the status of their courses, using the criteria listed above, and announce to their classes their plan for remedial action if any.
- B. Chairpersons and Deans, in their capacities as officers of Senate, should work collegially with course instructors to assist them in this assessment and planning.
- C. Students who are not satisfied with the remedial actions proposed or undertaken in one or more of their courses may communicate with their instructor, the department chairperson, the Dean of the faculty, or with Senate CEAS.
- D. Any complaints so received will be referred in the first instance to the departmental chairperson. If a student is still not satisfied with the decision taken at the departmental level, s/he may appeal to the Faculty committee charged with overseeing academic standards, and, ultimately, to Senate CEAS.
- E. Faculties may wish to develop more specific directives in response to these guidelines. Faculty-specific guidelines should be circulated broadly, so that all affected are aware of them, and a copy should be sent to Senate CEAS.
- F. For the 1984-1985 Fall/Winter session only, Senate delegates to the Faculty Councils the power to make such changes in academic regulations as are necessary as a result of disruptions to normal academic process. Changes to regulations made by Faculty Councils under this authority must be reported to the Secretary of Senate as soon as possible.
